HONOR MEMORY OF GREAT MAN

Rock County Bar Association Pays Tribute To Abraham Lincoln This Afternoon.

GEO. R. PECK ORATOR OF THE DAY

Gave Beautiful Tribute To The Greatest Statesman America Has Ever Developed In Its History--Big Audience At Myers Theatre.

Janesville today is paying its tribute to the memory of Abraham Lincoln. Schools are closed, flags are flying, many stores have been specially decorated for the occasion. Some factories are also closed and places of business were shut from three until five.

At the Myers theatre the centennial celebration exercises were held under the auspices of the Rock County Bar Association. Long before three the seats in the vast auditorium were filled and many were already standing. The upper gallery had been reserved for the school children, the balcony for the high school pupils, and overflowed from downstairs.

On the stage sat some eighty veterans of the civil war, members of the William H. Sargent Post of the G. A. R., forty ladies of the Woman's Relief Corps, Mayor S. H. Hodges, Chairman of the county board, Professor H. C. Buell of the high school, the Lotus Male quartette, Hon. A. A. Jackson, John P. Towne, Elmer Norcross, John Wesley Sale, A. S. Douglas, Edwin F. Carpenter, Horace McElroy, Hon. Orson H. Feltner, Chairman William Smith and the orator of the afternoon, George R. Peck.

The stage had been most tastefully decorated by a committee of the Daughters of the American Revolution--Miss Mae Treat, Miss Greenman and Miss Sarah Sutherland. In the center of the arch hung a large American flag with a portrait of Lincoln and draped to the sides were flags and bunting. Large vases with carnations and roses flanked the speakers' stand.

At three the exercises opened with a prayer by Reverend Joseph C. Hizon. This was followed by a selection of the Janesville Symphony Orchestra. The Lotus Male quartette then rendered "The Beautiful Country." Mrs. Janet H. Day gave a commemorative reading, followed by a second selection by the Lotus Male quartette, "We Are Coming, Father Abraham."

William Smith, President of the bar association and one of the veteran attorneys of the city, as presiding officer then introduced the speaker of the afternoon, Hon. George R. Peck of Chicago. Mr. Peck was a resident of Janesville from 1865 to 1871, was admitted to the bar while here and is a member of the county bar association. He spoke to old friends and neighbors and his tribute to Abraham Lincoln was one of the finest addresses ever given in Janesville.

Following his address the Lotus quartette sang "Dixie," which was followed by another selection of the Janesville Symphony Orchestra and then the vast audience united under the leadership of H. C. Buell in singing "America."

The committee for the bar association having charge of all arrangements was Alexander Matheson, Marshall P. Richardson, Fred C. Burpee, Claude J. Hendricks and Louis Avery.

Mr. Peck spoke as follows:

"Mr. President, members of the Rock County Bar association, comrades of the Grand Army, ladies and gentlemen:

"It is very fitting and appropriate that this association of lawyers should render homage to one of their ranking who, after winning high professional distinction, took to himself a glory and a fame that cannot die. You do well to remember that Abraham Lincoln was a lawyer. If you will recall his last great years--the years by which the world knows him--you will feel a certain pride in belonging to that profession which he chose in youth and whose principles and traditions were his guides and monitors to the end. In all that majestic on-marching career, we may see--may, we cannot fail to see--that he followed with almost religious devotion the approving voice and sanction of the law. Mark the keynote of the first inaugural: 'I hold, verily, that in contemplation of universal law and of the constitution, the union of these states is perpetual.' In that sentence it was the lawyer who spoke, giving to the statesman who surrounded him the fundamental idea upon which it was his purpose to stand. It was a brave pronouncement. Certainly, it was also political wisdom and political truth, but above these the clear vision of Abraham Lincoln saw the organic law of a nation consecrated and enthroned. I bid you, gentlemen of the bar, take mindful heed of that great ideal which lifted Abraham Lincoln to such lofty heights.

"This much I have thought to say of him, because he belonged to our guild. He knew, as we do, the rigor of a law suit; he had felt the joy of victory and the smart of defeat; and, I do not doubt, the memory of the days when he traveled the circuit and of forensic contests in which he had taken part moved and strengthened him in the weary years when nerve and strength were sorely needed. But Abraham Lincoln was not a mere lawyer; and history has given him a fame so universal that the world hardly remembers he belonged to our profession, that, if we cannot claim him simply because we are lawyers, we may yet rejoice that as citizens of the Republic we participate with all that bear the American name, in his un fading renown.

"In very truth, he belongs alike to all who have shared the precious heritage which he left to his countrymen. He belongs to them as the light-house does to the mariner who steers his bark by its steadfast ray. He belongs to them."

COMMITTEE GETS TO WORK

Will Summon All the Candidates to Appear Before Their Sessions to Give Testimony.

Madison, Wis., Feb. 12.--There will be no special attorney hired to conduct the investigation ordered by the legislature of Wisconsin into the subject of campaign expenditures made in the last Wisconsin, United States senatorial primary.

At the first meeting of the joint committee last night a controversy over this subject was determined in favor of the members doing the examining of witnesses.

Six of the seven investigators are attorneys, and this fact was the determining one in the discussion, although the pro-Stephenson men were inclined to hire an attorney for the committee.

The committee is composed of Senators Marsh (chairman), Hastings (the only democratic member), Morris, and Assemblymen Bray, Ingalls, Whitman, Hambrecht and Chapple. The latter is a printer and is the only non-lawyer in the "bunch."

A letter was ordered sent to each of the seven candidates for a United States senatorial nomination, asking them to appear at the first session of the inquiry, Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock in the capitol.

If a candidate refuses to respond, he will be sent for with a subpoena and fetched. The seven candidates are as follows:

Republicans--Isaac Stephenson, W. H. Hutton, S. A. Cook and F. E. McGovern. Democratic--Neal Brown and M. A. Hoyt. Social democratic--Jacob Rummel.

THE PROCLAMATION

"I order and declare that all persons held as slaves in the said designated states and parts of states are and hereafter shall be free, and I hereby enjoin upon the people so declared to be free to abstain from all violence, unless in necessary self-defense."—Abraham Lincoln.

O dark and milky, patiently and dimly
Waiting for God, your hour, at last,
Has come,
And freedom's song
Breaks the long silence of your night of wrong!

Arise and fling shake off the vile restraint
Of ages; but, like Dallymona's saint,
The oppressor spare,
Heap only on his head the coils of prayer!

Go forth like him! like him, return
again,
To bless the land whereon in bitter pain
You toiled at first,
And heal with freedom what your slavery cursed! —Whittier (1863).

LINCOLN
John Vanco Cheney, in the Atlantic for February.

Earth hold to him. The rough-down form,
Looming through that unnatural storm,
Hinted the rude, mixed mould
Ere chaos loosed her hold;

A lone, wind-bent hilltop tree,
His that pathetic majesty;
Forlorn even in his birth,
His roots deep in the earth.

Earth's is he yet. When from the hill
The warm gold flows, and hollows fill,
The sunlight shines his fame,
The winds blaze Lincoln's name.

Ay, Earth's he is; not hers alone,
Blood of our blood, bone of our bone,
Love folded him to rest
Upon a people's breast.

QUOTATIONS FROM LINCOLN
The Union must be preserved.
I believe this government cannot permanently endure half slave and half free.
If our sense of duty forbid slavery, then let us stand by our duty, fearlessly and effectively.
Having thus chosen our course, without guile and with pure purpose, let us renew our trust in God and go forward without fear and with manly hearts.
If this country cannot be saved without giving up the principle of liberty, I was about to say I would rather be assassinated on this spot than surrender it.
To sell or enslave any captured person on account of his color and for no offense against the laws of war, is a relapse into barbarism and a crime against the civilization of the age.
Gold is good in its place; but living, patriotic men are better than gold.
God must like common people or he would not have made so many of them.
Let us have that faith that right makes might; and in that faith let us, to the end, dare to do our duty as we understand it.

The reasonable man has long since agreed that interference is one of the greatest, if not the greatest, of all evils among mankind.
I do not wish to triumph over any man.
I have never willfully planted a thorn in any man's bosom.
No men living are more worthy to be trusted than those who toll up from poverty.
The purposes of the Almighty are perfect and must prevail, though we erring mortals may fail to accurately perceive them in advance.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Today the nation commemorates the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. In our own state, in our own city, exercises are being held which demonstrate the undying love and respect for the man who for four years guided the ship of state through its most troublesome voyage.
A writer in the Review of Reviews says of Lincoln as follows:
"Lincoln was fifty-two years old when he was inaugurated as president, in March, 1861, and he was fifty-six when assassinated in April, 1865. There are hundreds of people still living who know him, thousands who at some time heard him speak, and scores of thousands who remember having seen him.
"Yet so momentous was his period and so great were his qualities that he already stands forth as one of the great figures of history, as certain of immortal fame as any other man who has ever lived. What he might have been able to accomplish if he had lived to complete his second term is beyond any one's power to conjecture. He would probably have become involved in a serious controversy with congress.
"His point of view was very different from that of the harsh and implacable leaders who were responsible for the reconstruction policy and who undertook to convict President Andrew Johnson of high crimes and misdemeanors.
"His death was a great calamity, but doubtless it has helped to give that touch of peculiar dignity, pathos, and heroism to the accepted historical figure of Abraham Lincoln that so tragic an ending of a great career at its moment of climax must have bestowed.
"If he had fought congress through four bitter years on its reconstruction policy, and then lived long afterward as an ex-president, the historical portrait would have lacked something of the bold, statuesque outlines that it now possesses.
"This frontiersman of Illinois, who was familiar with the natural resources of Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, and the new west at large, had only to use his mind and his imagination to see that slavery was in a hopeless position, and that the worst thing that could befall the south would be a successful secession.
"For it was obvious on a little thought that the future of every country must depend upon the quality of its population. Meanwhile, the great west was becoming rich and powerful through the opportunities it gave to hundreds of young men and women from New England and the eastern states and to countless thousands from the British Isles, Germany, and other European lands.
"The slavery system, on the other hand, was not only keeping white immigrants from the south, but was also keeping the great majority of the southern white people ignorant and poor, unseeing them in the uplands and mountain districts. With the success of secession there would have been a practical if not a legal reopening of the foreign slave trade and the growth of population in the southern states would relatively have been a growth of the labor class—that is to say, of negro slaves.
"Thus in the case of a future war with the north and west, the fighting strength of the south would have been fatally impaired through its relative loss of white population, while the west would have been rich, populous, and dominant. The growth of negro population would have brought increasing danger of race conflict, and a possible repetition in parts of the south of the history of San Domingo. The war was better than that.
"Thus, all the scientific facts in the situation were against secession, and Lincoln had a keener instinct for their practical application than any other public man of his time. Jefferson and others of the early southern statesmen had grasped the same ideas; but the cotton rulers and the technical constitutional lawyers of a generation later than Jefferson lost the power to see facts in their large bearings.
"Lincoln was not northern; he was not southern; he was not western; he was simply national, and he happened to be wholly and entirely right. So much for Lincoln's statesmanship. It was broad and strong, and its principles were for the welfare of all parts of the nation.
"The lessons taught by Lincoln's life and tragic end can not be overestimated. His whole life's story was one which is so emphatically American that it typifies the nation who today are honoring his memory.

Down in Illinois Hopkins is running a close race with himself with a hostile camp in his own party keeping him on the anxious seat day after day. This is the rule of the people at the primaries which has been the subject of the reformers' cry for so many years past.
Judge Taft wants congress to do something so that Mr. Knox can become a member of his cabinet and in this many friends of Mr. Knox appear to be united. It is hoped all obstacles will be removed and that the wish of the president-elect can be accomplished.

The legislature has adjourned until Tuesday next. Meanwhile the plans will be perfected for further defeating the will of the people by refusing to elect Stephenson an United States Senator despite the fact the voters of the state decided they wanted him.
California has come to its senses and turned down the anti-Japanese bill. At last the state that borders on the Pacific realizes that it is but a part of the great United States and not a separate country.

A LOOK INTO A SOUL.

"Julius Selmers, teamster."
That is the way they wrote it in the records of the Chicago city morgue. Julius Selmers sampled life for sixty-five years and at the end of the period made up his mind life held nothing for him.
This old man kept a diary.
Reading the entries, one gets a look as through a window, into the soul of a man who is friendless and despondent, but who nevertheless dreams his dreams.
Note some of the entries:
"June 27.—What a bright, sunny day it is! The air is full of sweet sounds and odors. How lovely it would be to spend an hour in the green fields, but the iron wagon summons me, and nature's fragrance must come to me through the chinks of the foul freight houses."
"Dec. 25.—What memories the day brings to my old heart! But they are memories of some sixty odd Christmases that I have spent in poverty and rags.
"The boss gave me a dollar for a gift. I dare not refuse it, but I gave it to the first newboy I met. I hope he will have a merry Christmas. A beggar's Christmas is romantic; a teamster's is not even that."
"May 6.—I came near ending it all this morning. The old druggery, the daily round of sickening humdrum, is almost too much. Why did I not drive off that bridge when it was open? The poor old horse! I would have been cruel to him. Who would care for old Toby—or for old Selmers, for that matter?"
"Nov. 29.—My day of rest again. It is on Sunday that I can feel how my life has been a failure. I am going to end it soon. I feel it. Nothing to live for, nothing to die for, either, but I will take the chance. It cannot be far off."
"Goodby, little book, for today. You are the only friend I have, and after all, you are only myself."
The poor old man had a fine love of nature, of humanity and of old Toby—a mute, lagging, poet and dreamer.
We all dream dreams.
But some of us see some of our dreams come true.
This old man, with the soul of a poet, dreamed for half a century, and not one dream was realized.
You see, there MUST be a heaven, just as there must be a hell, else God is unjust and life is meaningless.

EX-JUDGE W. H. MOORE

JUDGE MOORE'S CONFIDENCE IN LOVE COST TWO MILLION DOLLARS.

When Sydney C. Love decided to retire a short time ago it was generally supposed he had amassed a fortune in the few years he has been on the street, and if former Judge William H. Moore or Mr. Love had had their way this report would have prevailed. As a matter of fact those who were on the inside and knew the conditions could not understand how Sydney Love had made his money and began to ask questions which eventually led to the truth of the matter being known.
It seems that ex-Judge William H. Moore of Diamond Match fame, placed every confidence in Sydney Love, who represented him on the exchange, and allowed him to handle immense sums practically as he wished, thinking that the securities for same were carefully kept in Love's strong box. During the last few weeks, however, he has become aware of the fact that these securities were missing to the amount of over $2,000,000, and this is the exact reason by Sydney C. Love & Co. have retired from business. Judge Moore rather than let his losses become known would gladly have kept his troubles to himself and pocketed his losses.

Sydney Love's career in six years from a railroad hand to the highest society in New York city is remarkable. He is a man of great personality and pleasing appearance, and through the influence of his many friends has been enabled to make big money, which he has spent more than freely. He maintained an elaborate home in New York, which is estimated to have cost him from $75,000 to $80,000 a year to keep up, he sides his Newport summer home and other luxuries. It is not definitely known whether Judge Moore will attempt to recover any of his losses or not.

Oh, Quit.
Here is the way to quit smoking (recommended by a man who failed to make it work): Instead of quitting off short, quit gradually. Don't smoke in the morning until you can't stand it any longer. Then smoke a cigar, and then quit again until you are compelled to smoke or go crazy. By degrees, you will learn to do without smoking. —Athletic Globe.

Perplexity, Beauty's Mar.
The forehead filled with lines is not always a sign of years. Often it is nothing but evidence of bad facial habits. Do you knit your eyebrows when you are thinking of perplexing matters or are down on your luck? If you do you will have a forehead seamed with lines and several deep furrows between the eyes.

Frivolous Person.
"A man about town, as near as I kin figger it out," remarked Uncle Gashall Houlbert, "is a fellow who wants to loaf around from pillar to post. Ain't satisfied to take up a place with the solid citizens every evening in the grocery."

AN ODD INCIDENT TOLD OF LINCOLN

Lost His Shoes on His Visit Here Sixty Years Ago While Guest at the Tallman Residence.

One little incident of Lincoln's visit to Janesville sixty years ago, is remembered by the man who afterwards became President. He stayed for the night at the residence of William Tallman after making his speech in the evening. In those days it was the custom for guests to place their shoes outside the door of the room to be "blackened" and returned. This Mr. Lincoln did, but failed to find them on arising in the morning. In those days it was the custom of the Tallman

The Tallman home on Jackson Street Visit Here Sixty Years Ago. The family to assemble in the library for morning prayers and Mr. Lincoln appeared in their midst in his stocking feet. They were blue homespun with white toes and heels. In quiet dignity he told Mrs. Tallman of his loss and said in a quaint manner: "They are too big for anyone else, Mrs. Tallman, so I am sure they were not stolen." A search was quickly made and the missing articles returned. Mr. Edgar Tallman, a son in the household, and father of Justice Stanley Tallman, said the dignity of the man, the quiet manner with which he told the story, while humorous in itself, was one at which none of the family even smiled over. Mr. Lincoln stayed in Janesville during the morning and attended church service here before returning to Hollet.

LAY CORNERSTONE OF MEMORIAL HALL

IMPRESSIVE TRIBUTE PAID TO MEMORY OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

PRESIDENT MAKES ADDRESS

WASHINGTON AND LINCOLN ALIKE IN LOFTY IDEALS AND SOUND COMMON SENSE.

LINCOLN'S PROPHETIC VISION

Life and Works of the Great Statesman Set Forth in Eloquent Speech by the Chief Executive of the Nation — Other Distinguished Men Contribute Laurels to His Memory — Immense Concourses Unable to Be Present to Witness the Exercises.

Hodgenville, Ky.—In a tent holding about 4,000 people the exercises commemorating the centenary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln were conducted here.

President Roosevelt, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishop Callaway, ex-Gov. Folk of Missouri and other leading men made addresses.

From all points, by train and over roads not particularly smooth at this season of the year, the people gathered to the exercises. A building four times the size of the tent provided could not have accommodated the crowd.

The corner stone of the Memorial hall was laid by President Roosevelt. In an impressive address the chief executive eulogized the life and work of the great statesman. He spoke as follows:

"We have met here to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of one of the two or three greatest men of the nineteenth century; of one of the greatest men in the world's history. This tall, slender, this boy who passed his ungainly youth in the dire poverty of the poorest of the frontier folk, whose rise was by weary and painful labor, lived to lead his people through the burning flames of a struggle for which the nation emerged, purified as by fire, born anew to a loftier life. After long years of iron effort, and of failure that came more often than victory, he at last rose to the leadership of the republic, at the moment when that leadership had become the stupendous world-task of the time. He grew to know greatness, but never once, success came to him, but never happiness, save that which springs from doing well a painful and a vital task. Power was his, but not pleasure. His furrows deepened on his brow, but his eyes were undimmed by either hate or fear. His gaunt shoulders were bowed, but his steel thighs never faltered as he bore for a burden the destiny of his people. His great and tender heart shrank from giving pain; and the task allotted him was to pour out like water the life-blood of the young men, and to feel in his every fiber the sorrow of the woman. Disaster saddened but never dismayed him. As the red years of war went by they found him ever doing his duty in the present, even facing the future with fearless front, high of heart, and dauntless of soul. Unbroken by hatred, unshaken by scorn, he worked and suffered for the people. Triumph was his at the last; and barely had he tasted it before murder found him, and the kindly, patient, fearless eyes were closed forever.

Washington and Lincoln. "As a people we are indeed beyond measure fortunate in the characters of the two greatest of our public men, Washington and Lincoln. Widely though they differed in externals, the Virginia landed gentleman and the Kentucky backwoodsman, they were alike in essentials, they were alike in the great qualities which rendered each able to render service to his nation and to all mankind such as no other man of his generation could or did render. Each had lofty ideals, but each in striving to attain these lofty ideals was guided by the soundest common sense. Each possessed infinite courage in adversity, and a soul wholly unspiced by prosperity. Each possessed all the gentler virtues commonly exhibited by good men who lack rugged strength of character. Each possessed also all the strong qualities commonly exhibited by those towering masters of mankind who have too often shown themselves devoid of so much as the understanding of the words by which we signify the qualities of duty, of mercy, of devotion to the right, of lofty disinterestedness in battling for the good of others. There have been other men as great and other men as good; but in all the history of mankind there are no other two great men as there are these, no other two good men as great. Widely though the problems of to-day differ from the problems set for solution to Washington when he founded this nation, to Lincoln when he saved it and freed the slave, yet the qualities they showed in meeting these problems are exactly the same as those we should show in doing our work to-day.

Lincoln's Deep Foresight. "Lincoln saw into the future with the prophetic imagination usually vouchsafed only to the poet and the seer. He had in him all the lift toward greatness of the visionary, without any of the visionary's fanaticism or egotism, without any of the visionary's narrow jealousy of the practical man and inability to strive in practical fashion for the realization of an ideal. He had the practical man's hard common sense and willingness to adapt means to ends; but there was in him none of that morbid growth of mind and soul which blinds so many practical men to the higher things of life. No more practical man ever lived than this homely backwoods idealist; but he had nothing in common with those practical men whose consciences are warped until they fail to distinguish between good and evil, fail to understand that strength, ability, shrewdness, whether in the world of business or of politics, only serve to make the possessor a more noxious member of the community, if they are not guided and controlled by a fine and high moral sense.

Lessons from Lincoln's Life. "We of this day must try to solve many social and industrial problems, requiring to an especial degree the combination of indomitable resolution with cool-headed sanity. We can profit by the way in which Lincoln used both these traits as he strove for reform. We can learn much of value from the very attacks which following that course brought upon his head, attacks alike by the extremists of revolution and by the extremists of reaction. He never wavered in devotion to the principles; in his love for the union, and in his abhorrence of slavery. Timid and lukewarm people were always denouncing him because he was extreme; but as a matter of fact he never went to extremes, he worked step by step; and because of this the extremists hated and denounced him with a fervor which now seems to us fantastic in its delinquency of the unreal and the impossible. At the very time when one side was holding him up as the apostle of social revolution because he was against slavery, the leading abolitionist denounced him as the 'slavehound of Illinois.' When he was the second choice of his opponents, the majority of his opponents attacked him because of what they termed his extreme radicalism, while a minority threatened to bolt his nomination because he was not radical enough. He had continually to check those who wished to go forward too fast, at the very time that he overrode the opposition of those who wished not to go forward at all. The goal was never dim before his vision; but he picked his way cautiously, without either halt or hurry, as he strode toward it, through such a morass of difficulty that no man of less courage would have attempted it, while it would surely have overwhelmed any man of judgment less serene.

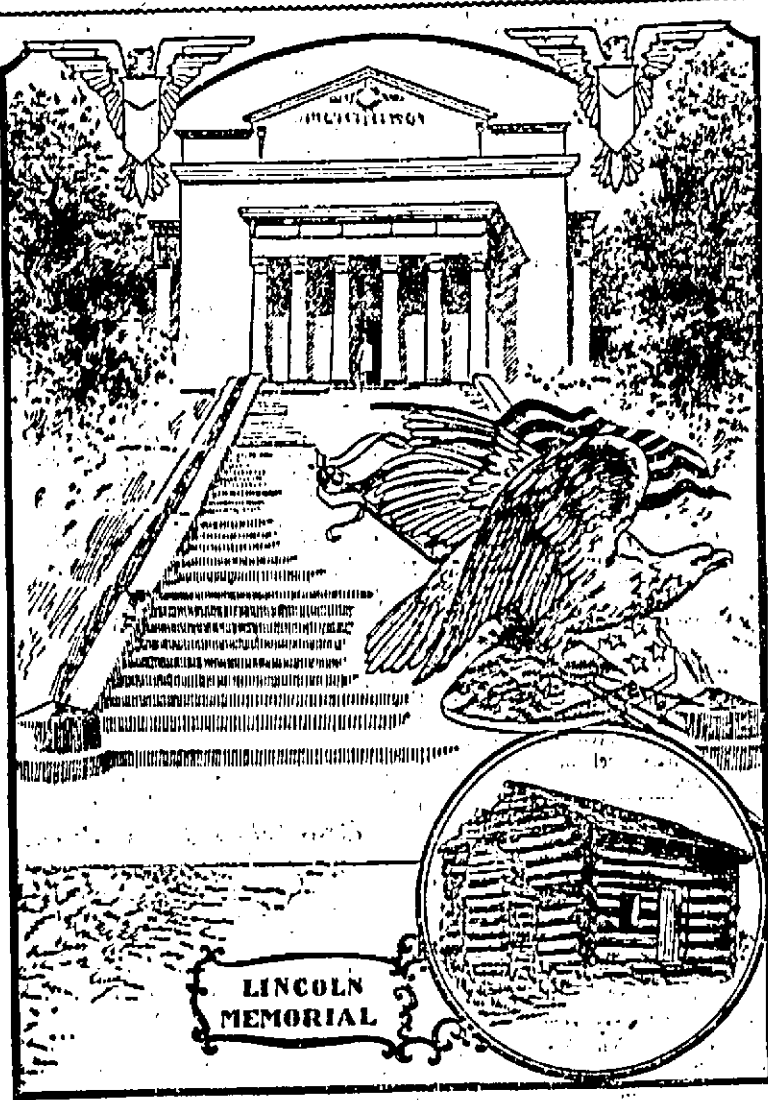

Man of Great Tolerance. "Yet perhaps the most wonderful thing of all, and, from the standpoint of the American of to-day and of the future, the most vitally important, was the extraordinary way in which Lincoln could fight valiantly against what he deemed wrong and yet preserve undiminished his love and respect for the brother from whom he differed. In the hour of a triumph that would have turned any weaker man's head, in the heat of a struggle which spurred many a good man to dreadful vindictiveness, he said truthfully that so long as he had been in his office he had never willingly planted a thorn in any man's bosom, and besought his supporters to study the incidents of the trial through which they were passing as philosophy from which to learn wisdom and not as wrongs to be avenged; ending with the solemn exhortation that, as the strife was over, all should reunite in a common effort to save their common country.

Strong Sense of Justice. "He lived in days that were great and terrible, when brother fought against brother for what each sincerely deemed to be the right. In a contest so grim the strong men who alone can carry it through are rarely able to do justice to the deep convictions of those with whom they grapple in mortal strife. At such times men see through a glass darkly; to only the rarest and loftiest spirits is vouchsafed that clear vision which gradually comes to all, even to the lowly, as the struggle fades into distance, and wounds are forgotten, and peace creeps back to the hearts that were hurt. But Lincoln was given this supreme vision. He did not lose the man from whom he differed. Weakness was as foreign as wickedness to his strong, gentle nature; but his courage was of a quality so high that it needed no bolstering of dark passion. He saw clearly that the same high qualities, the same courage, and willingness for self-sacrifice, and devotion to the right as it was given them to see the right; it was given both to the men of the north and to the men of the south. As the years roll by, and as all of us, wherever we dwell, grow to feel an equal pride in the valor and self-devotion, alike of the men who wore the blue and the men who wore the gray, so this whole nation will grow to feel a peculiar sense of pride in the mightiest of the mighty men who mastered the mighty days; the lover of his country and of all mankind; the man whose blood was shed for the union of his people and for the freedom of a race, Abraham Lincoln."

SONS OF ITALY HONORED.

Monument Will Perpetuate Memory of Great Artists.

Italy is famous for the way in which she remembers her celebrated sons, so that it has always been a matter of surprise that Bologna had never commemorated the remarkable Carracci family, to whom she owes her fame as the seat of the famous Bologna school.

A monument, erected to the three celebrated artists, has removed this reproach to the city, rising in the portico of the Institute of Fine Arts, its most proper setting.

Ludovico, Annibale and Agostino Carracci were perhaps the most remarkable trio in art of the same family the world has ever seen, and all over Italy are to be found their works, so much were the prophets honored in their own country, but they are also seen at their best in Madrid and Paris. In their art lives the core of the Bolognese school, its spirit and its atmosphere, all its peculiar ideas and its light and shadow—the Carracci were true sons of their time and city.

Ludovico died at Bologna, Agostino at Parma, and Annibale in Rome. Lanzi says the first was to his school what Homer was to the Greeks, and he is the best known here in his native town. Annibale was perhaps the best artist, and he has the distinction of having a tomb in the Pantheon, opposite that of Raphael, both of which, by the way, have to be well scrubbed twice a year to remove the scum of enterprising tourists, who perhaps thus think to gain fame. It is related that Agostino painted a horse in such lifelike manner that a live horse went up to the picture and neighed. Over the tomb of Annibale will rise also in Rome a bust.

But with all their individual fame, which was great, the three are chiefly known to posterity as the wonderful founders of the Bolognese school.

Social Psychology. One of the chief problems of the twentieth century will be the regulation of other combinations of men, whether based upon race or voluntary associations for industrial and other purposes; and that problem will be Transferring the fourteen untried night rider prisoners and Ed Marshall to Dresden, Tenn.

Union City, Tenn.—The excitement over the recent night rider case is gradually subsiding, though there are still many threats of violence and the many witnesses and attorneys in the case are almost daily in receipt of anonymous and threatening letters.

The father of the prosecuting attorney has had to flee the country because the night riders have learned that no threats go with the prosecutor and feel that the only chance to weaken him is to threaten, and possibly, carry out their threats, on his father, an aged man, who has been in close touch with the Reelfoot Lake people all his life.

The troops are being gradually withdrawn, and the transfer to Dresden, Tenn., was one of the steps taken last week in order to allow more of the state militia to return home.

FLOODS WORK GREAT HAVOC IN CALIFORNIA—Wading in the main street of Stockton and view of the new half million dollar hotel with 10 feet of water in the basement and one foot of water flowing under the proposed arcade.

Stockton, Cal.—Stockton is inundated. Two feet of water is flowing through the streets with the velocity of a mill race. Great damage is being done to streets and buildings. The total loss for this vicinity may reach many millions. Many railroads have been completely blocked and transportation cut off. The whole Sacramento valley is being swept by one of the worst floods ever known, telegraph and telephone lines have been swept away and Sacramento is completely isolated. Thousands of acres of rich farming land have been inundated and the loss to the farming community is immense.

HENRY, PUSHING PAT CALHOUN IN THE FRISCO BRIBERY CHARGE, San Francisco, Jan. 29.—Patrick Calhoun, who is now on trial in Judge

William P. Lawler's department of the superior court for an alleged attempt to bribe Fred Nicolas, a former member of the board of supervisors, in connection with the granting of a permit for trolleying several street railways formerly operated by cable, for the last 16 years has been a street railway magnate, having taken an active part in the consolidation of street railway systems in Pittsburg, Baltimore, St. Louis and San Francisco. He also has large interests in real estate in various parts of the country, chiefly in the south. Mr. Calhoun is a grandson of John C. Calhoun. He was born at Fort Hill, N. C., in 1859, and was admitted to the bar in Georgia in 1875.

Attorney Francis J. Honey, who has just returned from the east, will have charge of the prosecution.

The Ideal Meal.
The ideal meal consists of bread, butter, and cheese, according to Dr. J. E. Squire, who delivered a lecture to the British National Health society. "These foods," he said, "contain all the elements necessary for the proper working of the body, and thus form a complete meal."

Correcting an Error.
It was a minister's small son, whose habit was to ask God to bless each member of the family after his prayer. Having been put to bed one night in a hurry, he forgot one of them. Kneeling again with hands clasped and eyes closed, he addressed the Lord, thus: "Oh, Lord, wouldn't that kill you? I forgot grandma! God bless grandma. Amen."—Bellemeaur.

Unjust to the Girls.
The report that this country spends only a million dollars a day for sugar is distinctly disapproving, if it is not grossly unjust to the bonbon-consuming capacity of the matinee girl.

Passive Virtue Not Enough.
Howards of making your moral staple consist of the negative virtues. It is good to abstain from all that is hurtful and sinful. But to make a business of it leads to emaciation of character, unless one feeds largely also on the more nutritious diet of active sympathetic benevolence.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Charity and Love.
Without dew and light flowers fade. Charity and love are the dew and light of the human heart.—Mme. de Gentils.

A Formula.
Right ideas, backed by persistence and promulgated at psychological moments, will gain a foothold and become a great force for good, no matter how determined may be the opposition.—Detroit News.

to all who cherish the ideas, the hope and the faith that were in him. What, ever and how many memories cluster around his great career, something of their glory, some breath of their fragrance, rests upon every man who strives to make the United States of America such a nation as Abraham Lincoln strove to make it.

"When we think of the name that is in every heart and upon every lip, how like a dream across the century that is past. In a remote Kentucky cabin in a hundred years ago this very day the curtain was rising upon a drama which was destined to be of epic grandeur. Recalling the hour and the event, we almost seem to hear the rhythmic beat of the years as they speed to their eternal goal.

"It is sometimes said, and said with truth, that the American character, considered as a type, has not yet been formed and moulded into shape. Undoubtedly, it is still plastic and malleable; but, we must remember that the processes of time are slow. The out-throw period since the western continent first dawned upon Europe is but a brief span in comparison with the centuries which have been passing. Norman and Saxon and Dane into the English race. And yet, we have something to show when great names are counted, something to remember when great deeds are told. Abraham Lincoln outshines the Pharaohs, and outshines common blood forevermore.

"The laws of descent are mysterious, if not altogether fathomless. Science, indeed, tells us that men are, in their essential qualities, the result and product of all their ancestors. But how, and why it is so, who can tell? The thought of Abraham Lincoln was so humble, his environment and that of his family so narrow and so steeped in poverty, it seems like a miracle that he should ever have burst such bonds. Nicolay and Hay in their great work, after describing his wretched birthplace, say: 'And there in the midst of the most unpromising circumstances that ever witnessed the advent of a hero into the world, Abraham Lincoln was born on the 12th day of February, 1809.' In the event there was no need to attract attention—absolutely no prophecy of the future intensely shimmering in the newborn child. Least of all was there any hint of the solemn pageantry with which a great nation this day commemorates that lowly birth. Birthdays are reckoned and pauses in the symphony of time, and in observing the great and notable ones, we set history to music.

"Abraham Lincoln's parents were Virginians, but the ancestral strain flowed from Old England through New England, New Jersey and Pennsylvania before it reached Virginia. The first of his race to settle in America was Samuel Lincoln, who came from Northampton, England, in 1638, and cast his lot with the God-fearing settlers of New England, Massachusetts. Later, his son, Mordecai, pushed on to New Jersey, and thence to Pennsylvania. John, who was Mordecai's son, returned from Pennsylvania to New Jersey, but soon sought another home in Rockingham county, Virginia, and through him the blood of the English Puritan flowed unintermittently to Abraham Lincoln. They were a family of frequent migrations, ever hungering for the wilderness and the frontier. If you follow the trail, you will find them from Massachusetts to New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia and Kentucky, and after the birth of Abraham Lincoln, to Indiana and Illinois. Out of these wanderings, perhaps by reason of them, or it may be, in spite of them, was evolved the highest type of man this nation has known. And that is the mystery of it all, from every point of view. Human wisdom fails utterly when it grapples with a question. If any answer shall ever come, it must be in that far-off plumed region where the mind can get nearer than now to the fugitive wherewithal and the ever elusive why. What gave so humble a plant such a noble fruitage? Is a problem we cannot yet solve. But this we know, that it is our boon and privilege to behold, admire and love. Carlyle, within certain limitations, was not far from right in adoring heroes; and he was more than right in seeing that heroes do not of necessity wear plumes and sabers. It is the meek and not the mighty who are promised the inheritance of the earth. Francis of Assisi, out on the mountain side, taking the hermit's cowl and perch upon his shoulders, and beckoning the poor peasant to follow him in the pathway to the higher life, is a nobler figure than the great Medici, bent with the weight of his tinseled and his brocade. In the same way, it may be truly said that Luther was a greater conqueror than Von Moltke; and Victor Hugo in exile, a more potent force than the Third Napoleon in the Tuilleries. Ideal characters cannot be made to order. They must stand for something more than accident, for something better than title and dignity. You do well to celebrate this day, and you will be wise if, here and now, you pledge a new and increasing faith in the memory of Abraham Lincoln and his noble life.

"The times in which we live are filled with high appeals, and solemn warnings, and yet, we are in danger of forgetting plain old truths. The age is restless. Everywhere there is discontent, partly right and partly wrong; but they greatly err who imagine that the white crest upon the wave is a true measure of the depths below. The dogmatist and the doctrinaire, whose lips have hitherto been muzzled by the dew of wisdom, think that they, alone of all others, have a message to which the mass must listen. And thus it happens that the times are often made to seem more, and sometimes far less, than they really are. It is well, perhaps, that it should be so. Let us not complain; for it is a wise and wholesome thing which declares that every creed and doctrine shall be heard, and every voice shall have its say. But when the creaking pipe and chirrup, it is pleasant to think that somewhere there is peace; and when summer home is upon us, it is sweet to rest in the shadow of an illustrious name. 'He was not of this age, but of all time,' was the noble phrase of Ben Jonson to Shakespeare, and it is as widely true of him who was the greatest, bravest, wisest leader that ever wore the name of American citizen.

"Abraham Lincoln was great, not fully knowing, but, I think, always believing in his own greatness. In him, common sense took on flesh and blood. Rooted in humble soil, his life grew and strengthened and unconsciously flowered into fame. If you compare him with other statesmen—with Pitt, or Fox, or Palmerston—you will see that he had learned the secret never revealed to them, the sublime art of lending while seeming to follow. He is sometimes called the founder of the republican party. He was not that, but he was more. When, in 1858, he made that memorable campaign of Illinois, his party was a great instrument, discordant and untuned. He touched its chords and straightway a nation leaped into life to follow its enchanting strains. Some, perhaps, are here today who know him; all have felt in their veins the thrill of his inspiring words. In those early days no one fathomed him. To his neighbors, he was a plain, homely man; but behind that rugged face and the flitting clothes, there dwelt the soul of a ruler. No herald announced his coming, no trumpet sounded when he came. He came—no king of men, but leader of men—rose from the prairies. 'Is not a man better than a town?' asks Emerson. Verily, Abraham Lincoln, proclaiming the unwelcome truth that had just begun to dawn, was more than a city with all its domes and turrets flashing against the sky. We often talk of men who have a mission. Think of him in all that great debate, sounding into unwilling ears the prophetic figure of the house divided against itself. Again and again it rang out, like an alarm bell, calling upon men to bestir themselves if they would avert the catastrophic wrath of the coming storm.

"And the storm came—but the house stood. It stood because Abraham Lincoln lived to set it right, and to make all who dwell therein free, by the grace of God, and his own immortal pen.

"It is something more than a sentiment which makes us love the memory of Abraham Lincoln, though sentiment alone is a sufficient reason. The years have lifted him into the region of legend and tradition. But there are still among us men whose memories go back to the days when he carried the nation's burdens. They remember how the world opened its eyes to marvel at his never-failing judgment, his tender sympathy, and the unconquerable spirit which disaster could not shake, nor victory too much elate. He kept his even poise in good and in evil times. No president before or since ever selected such a cabinet. He chose his rivals to be his advisers, and easily towered above them all. And, yet, this man, so sagacious and sensible, had, as the greatest always have, a temperamental highly wrought, poetic, mystical, almost superstitious. The unseen world haunted him like a vision. To him was given that inward eye, which, as Wordsworth sang, the deep perception of things which are precious because they are invisible. It seems strange to us that Abraham Lincoln believed in the dreams that came to him before great victories and defeats; but it is because we cannot fully comprehend a nature, in which, if there had not been some vent, soul and body would have sunk together under the terrible strain that was upon him. In the midst of it all a marvellous solace came to him in that sense of humor with which he was so largely endowed. Only fools are always serious. Abraham Lincoln's humor gives him a place in the first order of minds. Laughter and tears are next of kin. The same pen that wrote Hamlet gave to the world the rollicking fun of Pinocchio, and thereby showed that his genius was as broad and general as the casing air. If Abraham Lincoln had been a pedant; if he had been simply an able lawyer; nay, if he had been only a statesman, instead of a man, you would never have heard of his strolling about in the White House at night—out under the old days by the Sangamon, and to brood over the unknown future and the veil which hung between him and his death.

"The mythical and the romantic have already gathered their stories and wreathed them about his name. The age of chivalry has passed, and this unromantic century does not readily accept the traditional and the unreal. And yet, King Arthur and the Old are no more heroes in the fabulous tales of their knightly deeds than is Abraham Lincoln in the quaint and curious anecdotes of his life. It is the great man in history whom we can make seem like ourselves, the plain everyday people. Who knew he did how to say the right word? Who, like him, could touch the popular heart when it was ready to break, and make it beat again with his own high resolves. We took our courage from him, and the shattered armor filled up when he sounded the summons to come.

"The great crisis of his life, as all the world knows, was the proclamation of freedom. It has been glorified in history, poetry and art. And, yet, respondent as it was, he gave no thought to the dramatic events which usually accompany such events. It was, perhaps, an inspiration, but it was not a sudden vision. He called upon the Pyramids and past ages to be witnesses of his genius. If you will stop to consider, you will see how the very greatness of it forbade any of the tawdry gliding of a theatrical performance. Others might be thinking of such things, but he had that within which passeth show. Simplicity is the truest sublimity. And thus it happened that the greatest act in American history,—perhaps in all history—went forth only as an appeal to the considerate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God.

"And then his prophecy came true. The house came to be divided. The nation of the Union, pressing forward with new hope, carried victory and freedom together and made them one. History has given Abraham Lincoln a unique place. He had power greater than any king or emperor, and he used it as modestly as a village pastor might wield his influence over a rural congregation. It has sometimes been said that he did not have in the highest sense what is known as 'executive ability.' I am glad that he did not. Very small men have had that. But he had what is better. It was granite for the right, but yielding as water when common sense touched his eyes and heart.

"The better angels of our nature, of which he spoke in that first sublime appeal to his countrymen, were living realities to him; and many a time when some soldier-boy had made a slip from the rules of military duty and discipline, those better angels pleaded for him, and pleaded not in vain. How true it is that 'Spirits are not finely touched but to fine issues.' Abraham Lincoln's nature was not that which is commonly, but mistakenly, supposed to dwell in the back-woodsman and the rustic. God sets his seal on the brow which is worthy to receive it. You cannot tell what subtle law it was that made a Warwickshire village flesh Shakespeare out of the world's great canvas, nor why Burns came from an Ayrshire cottage to be the universal singer of humanity. Equally, it is beyond our ken to guess why Abraham Lincoln, plain and homespun, was called from an Illinois prairie to the first place in the world.

"He was above all things a man; strong, resolute, modest, too great to be proud, too deeply introspective not to see his own limitations and his own possibilities. No ruler by divine right ever had more true dignity, more laborer driving his team ahead, more true humility. As Abraham Lincoln, he never forgot that he was president; as president, he never forgot that he was Abraham Lincoln. He was more than conqueror. The armies triumphed at last; but greater than Atlanta or Richmond or Appomattox, was the conquest he made of the world's opinions, and the world's heart. Four years had lifted him into the secure region where neither malice nor envy nor uncharitableness can ever come. Years of broken hopes, of privations, of disappointment and years of agony. And he had gone down in ruin, and generals had ridden to defeat. But, still, the nation waited, patiently trusting the leader who never spoke a doubtful word. We lived on hope, the medicine of the unhappy. But the currents came right at last. Victories began to crowd upon each other, giving assurance that fortune had repented and would make atonement for the past.

"Those of us who are old, remember how the Fourth of July seemed a new birth at Gettysburg, and was given a deeper meaning when Vicksburg opened its gates and the river flowed untroubled to the sea. And then the months went on, crowded with thrilling scenes, as if a new Homer were chanting another story for the ages. Every day some shadow was broken; every hour some shadow stood up and thanked God that he was free. In that last triumphal year there was a Wilderness to be crossed, but there was a Grant to cross it. There was a sea landing the beach by Savannah, but there was a Sherman eager to plant the flag on the water. And so the end came in glory and with a joy that never could find words. And with the end came death—and immortality.

"When illness last in the dooryard bloomed, and the great star early dropped in the western sky in the night, I mourned, and yet shall mourn with ever returning spring.

"Nature has gifts that claim kinship with humanity. The story is told that farmers in central Illinois isolated, with quaint but touching gravity, that the brown thrush did not sing for a year after he died. When he ceased to breathe, Edwin M. Stanton turned to the group of mourners standing by his bedside and said, 'Now he belongs to the ages.'

"It is true; and the times in which we live, the events which we have witnessed, or that have come to us from those who saw, and heard, and felt, make us hostages to his memory, and pledge us to that universal truth, whose voice pleads for every good cause.

"It is an inspiring thing to follow one whose leadership is always toward what is best in American citizenship. Viewing that great figure in all our history we cannot fail to see that he was absolutely free from cant and affectation, doing bravely and openly the things he conceived to be his duty. He lived in plain view of his neighbors and friends, sharing their joys and sorrows, doing his duty after the fashion of a brave and honest man. Until the time when the nation called him to his great office, he might have been counted, and, I suppose, was counted, in some sense, a politician, but I have never heard that he was assumed of the fact, or that he was so assumed. Undoubtedly he was recognized, and it is one proof of his greatness, that in every constitutional government, parties, notwithstanding their blemishes and imperfections, are the forces upon which statesmen and patriots and the people themselves must rely. If you would make steam work you must harness it into the mechanism of an engine. If you would make principles effective, you must organize them into machinery which will break down all barriers which stand in the path of them.

"The large, well-rounded nature of Abraham Lincoln always reached out for the high essentials, but never yasted time on small abstractions. Slavery in all its forms was hideous to him, and he opposed its extension with all the strength of his rugged nature, but, recognizing its constitutional sanctions, he never thought of disturbing it in the states where it was protected by law, until, to save the Union, and to crush the rebellion, he sentenced it to death.

"Abraham Lincoln was the apostle of opportunity. Doing always the duty that lay nearest, he worked with the tools that were at hand. He knew—and we must learn—that majorities and minorities may be right or wrong; but whatever is best, will some day come if only patience stands on guard.

"How pitiful seem the little contentions of little men! More than any other of our statesmen, Abraham Lincoln stands for that largeness of view, that serene balance of mind, which is the true evidence of genius. And that is our highest lesson today, and the lesson for the centuries to come. Above all else, Abraham Lincoln leads us away from things which are petty and ignoble, to the heights—always to the heights.

"Comrades of the Grand Army: More than any others in this great assemblage, you are the sure and concrete proof of American patriotism. You have worn the blue; you have carried the flag; and you have stood in rank when the air was filled with screams of shot and shell. But today, the peace for which you fought rests upon you as a blessing and a benediction.

"Let me salute you in soldier fashion, and give you heart and hand in memory of the old days and the old cause. It must needs be that time and frost, and the years that never stop, have stiffened our joints and given us the stoop of age, but, shall the currents of our hearts be slackened? Comrades, we are old, but there are infinite memories which vibrate to be true to the cause which was the love of our youth. When life and drum were beating, it was easy to keep step to every call; and now, when our lives have almost reached the end, and our walk is slow and heavy, shall we not remember that it

Two Authorities on the Care and Education of Poor and Unfortunate Children.

Among those who recently gathered in Washington to discuss the problem connected with the care and education of poor and unfortunate children, none stood out more prominently than Miss Jane Adams, L.L.D., of Chicago, and Dr. Hastings H. Hart, also of Chicago. Miss Adams lectures on 'Devices for Minimizing the Dependence' before the delegates assembled at the White House conference was remarkable in its original thought and clear and concise handling.

Dr. Hastings H. Hart has made a life study of the child problem and has been selected by Mrs. Russell Sage to head the Russell Sage foundation. He spoke on the 'Evolution of Child Placing,' and brought out many new and important facts in this department of this international problem. Altogether the conference was a great success and the fruits of its work will be felt for years to come.

Suffocated in His Hat.
'Fell Into his hat and suffocated.' This is the indorsement on the death certificate of Alfred Parlow, who was found dead by the roadside in North Raynham, Mass., by a neighbor. The man was on his way to his home, and tripped and fell. His derby hat slipped down over his eyes, and his face was forced into it. The man never recovered sufficiently to extricate himself, dying of suffocation.

Statesman's Complaint.
England's house of commons wants ventilation. Plenty of air is pumped into the chamber, and it comes through the gratings on the floor, but it comes from a spot just over the bank of the Thames river, with its ill-favored barges. And the other evening a member not a colleague with his handkerchief to his nose. 'You never know what will pass inside,' he spluttered, 'but you always know what's passing outside.'

Work of Humorous Mason.
In Litchfield (Eng.) cathedral the central pillar of the chapter-house and the clustered shafts and vaulting ribs which spread from it are very fine specimens of early English work. One of the pillars contains the quaint design of a cat with a mouse in its mouth. It is supposed to have been executed in a humorous spirit by one of the masons, who, so far as the stone portal told, made it quite realistic.

EASY IN EVERY WAY—SKIMMING WITH AN IMPROVED DE LAVAL

Skimming milk with an improved DE LAVAL cream separator is an easy, simple matter from start to finish. Getting the machine ready, filling the supply can, turning the crank, and cleaning when through are all done with the greatest ease and convenience.

Every part of the DE LAVAL machine is designed for easy operation. The bowl construction permits of its being very compact and small in size and requiring but low speed. The length and height of the crank handle are just right for easiest turning. The method of gearing is the product of perfect engineering. Thus the necessary speed is maintained with the least continuous effort on the part of the operator.

Some separators are so designed as to run, deceptively easy when starting, but greatly tire or strain the operator in a half hour's use. The DE LAVAL turns easy from the beginning to the end of a run. Scientifically correct mechanical construction throughout is the reason for it.

The improved DE LAVAL machine is so simple in every feature that an inexperienced person could if necessary take it apart from top to bottom in five minutes, and put it together again within ten minutes. There is no need of expert knowledge or hard work in operating a DE LAVAL machine or handling any of its parts. It's 'Easy in Every Way.'

Our illustrated catalogue explains DE LAVAL simplicity and ease of operation in detail. Let us send you a copy or, better still, try a machine for yourself in your own dairy. You have but to ask for another.

GREAT PREPARATION TO WELCOME HEIR TO THE DUTCH THRONE. Queen of Holland and her Consort, Prince Henry, driving in the streets.

The Hague.—No sooner had the glad tidings of an expected heir to the throne spread through Holland than everywhere committees of ladies were formed, to consider some appropriate present to offer their queen for the auspicious event.

At first the idea was that all the women of Holland should combine in the gift, but it was found that in Amsterdam a definite plan had already taken shape, and that the ladies of Holland's capital had agreed to present an elaborate cradle with coverlet in modern art needlework, which is to be executed under the direction of Mrs. Van Emstede-Winkler, teacher of art needlework at the Government School of Applied Art in the government museum of Amsterdam. It was under her direction that the exquisite robes worn by her majesty at her coronation and wedding ceremonies were embroidered. The cradle itself is to be modeled by one of Holland's best artistic designers.

The other towns of Holland are now also at work separately, and everywhere, in The Hague, Rotterdam, Utrecht, Maastricht, etc., committees of ladies are actively engaged in selecting something pretty and appropriate. The great importance of the coming event to the nation is felt very strongly in the religious communities, and, spontaneously, all agreed to offer up prayers for her majesty, even before the official request of the ministerial council, that the prayers of the nation be read, reached them. This official request was sent to every religious community in the kingdom, regardless of the differences in creed and sect, which shows that the true spirit of religious toleration still lives among the governing circles of the land.

The whole population of The Hague take an immense interest. In their quiver at present, and wherever she goes she is followed by a little crowd, while many visitors from the country stand for hours near the palace, waiting to see the queen. Evidently she enjoys this, and the most awkward and embarrassed obedience of the country folk are acknowledged by her, with her most charming bow and pleasant smile. Not a day passes that she doesn't walk out, even in the severest cold, when the thermometer registered 23 degrees, she still took her usual constitutional, generally to visit her mother at her residence in the Voorhout.
